ECONOMIC CONTEXT (BANK OF MEXICO)

Domestic

According to the timely estimate of GDP, in the fourth quarter of 2024, economic activity recorded a quarterly reduction of 0.55% with seasonally adjusted data. This contraction was a result of decreases in primary and secondary activities, as well as a loss of dynamism in tertiary activities. In particular, primary and secondary activities declined by 8.89% and 1.21%, respectively, on a seasonally adjusted quarterly basis, while tertiary activities showed an increase of 0.22%.

From a sectoral perspective, manufacturing production exhibited a significant drop, which more than reversed the growth recorded in the previous quarter, while construction spending showed a downward trajectory. The mining sector experienced its fourth consecutive quarter of declines, while tertiary activities showed a general loss of dynamism, although with heterogeneous behavior across the sectors within it. Finally, in the October-November two-month period, primary activities decreased.

On the demand side, in the October-November period of 2024, private consumption continued to slow down, while investment remained weak. Additionally, it is estimated that in the last quarter of 2024, the value added of exports registered a positive contribution to the growth of productive activity, though lower than the one seen in the third quarter.

International

In the fourth quarter of 2024, global economic activity slightly moderated its pace of expansion compared to the growth observed throughout the year. Furthermore, this performance continued to be below pre-pandemic levels, with significant differences between countries. In general, advanced economies registered a growth rate lower than the one seen in the previous quarter.

In the United States, economic activity showed solid growth in the fourth quarter of 2024, although lower than that observed in the previous quarter. The Gross Domestic Product (GDP) grew at a seasonally adjusted quarterly rate of 0.6%, after expanding by 0.8% in the third quarter. This growth was primarily supported by the strength of private consumption.

In the euro area, the economy showed virtually no growth in the last quarter of 2024. The region's GDP grew at a seasonally adjusted quarterly rate of 0.1%, after increasing by 0.4% in the previous quarter. The most recent available indicators point to a slowdown in the services sector and a continued weakness in manufacturing activity.

As for the rest of the major advanced economies, they grew at a higher rate compared to the previous quarter. In the last quarter of the year, the major emerging economies showed a similar growth rate compared to the third quarter.

The global growth prospects developed by international organizations for 2025 remained relatively stable compared to those at the end of last year. Thus, they continue to point to a similar growth of economic activity compared to the performance observed in 2023 and expected in 2024, although the differences in growth rates between countries became more pronounced.
